THE REAL REASON WHY.

The indictment most vigorously urged against Mr. MacDonald as a candidate for Congress is the one that before he became a Fall Moose he was a Republican. In other words it is the same indictment that he was laid against all the Fall Mooses who were not formerly Democrats. — Mining Journal.

It is not the fact that Mr. MacDonald left the Republican party so much as the circumstances which led up to it. In the August primaries Mr. MacDonald was a candidate for the Republican nomination for prosecutive attorney and was defeated. Had he been nominated he would now be preaching loyalty to party, just as he did when he was the nominee on the Republican ticket for circuit judge. The Republicans were good to Mr. MacDonald. He was twice elected prosecutive attorney and also nominated for circuit judge, but when the party considered he had been sufficiently favored he became a candidate on the Progressive ticket, selling an opportunity for office that no longer was offered by the Republican party.

TAKING ADRIANOPLE.

The reduction of Adrianople, which is the first aim of the Balkan alliance in its war against Turkey, is likely to be no holiday task. It is stated that Adrianople is nearly, if not quite as well protected as Port Arthur was when the Japanese undertook the investment of that fortress in 1904. The fortifications are of the most modern type, constructed largely under the supervision of German engineers or of Turks trained in German schools. The guns are of the best Krupp patterns and the men behind them are reputed to be well-trained artificers. Unless the allies can completely encircle the city, cutting and holding the rail line to the southeast, the reinforcement of the fortifications and the provisioning of the garrison will present no grave problem to the Turkish war department. Port Arthur held out against Nag's assault for five months and when the capitulation came it was hastened by the operations of the Japanese fleet. The allies confronting Adrianople will have to depend upon operations by land.

THE M. J. AND TOWNSEND.

The Mining Journal doesn't like Senator Townsend now. When he was a candidate for his present office the M. J. was one of his most vociferous supporters. The Mining Journal supported him in his campaign because he was progressive, but when he would not join the Progressive party the M. J. deserted him, on the theory that only the members of the new party can be real progressives. However, Senator Townsend has not changed. He still is a good Republican, and a progressive one too. The Republican party is the party of real progress, its record of progressive legislation speaks it. The Mining Journal is wrong in assuming Republicans are not progressives, and that Senator Townsend is different than he was two years ago. The senator will be in the upper country next week to deliver an address at Hancock. He will find that the majority of his many friends here consider his course, in remaining a Republican, entirely consistent.

TAFT AT HIS BEST.

It is to be regretted that every American congressman and every American voter who makes a congressman could not have heard the speech made at the naval banquet in New York recently by the president of the United States, comments the Chicago Examiner.

There was not a trace of politics nor a suggestion of self-interest or demagoguery in the president's remarks. Mr. Taft was perfectly simple and absolutely sincere. He was at his best. His speech was an expression of clear-cut, level-headed, red-blooded Americanism which should appeal to every citizen.

The president's plea for a larger navy was reasonable in its earnestness and sincerity. It was based upon the policy of a national insurance against war and commercial disaster, upon the necessities of the Panama Canal.

upon the safety of the Monroe Doctrine and upon the preservation of our dignity and wholesome respect among nations.

The president's appeal for the continuation of the congressional policy of two battleships a year was convincing in its common-sense logic.

The heartiest, most unanimous and most spontaneous applause of the evening was given by that great and remarkably representative audience to this portion of the president's speech.

President Taft never made a better and more effective public speech. It was at once reverent and prophetic in its forecast of peace and arbitration and resolute and aggressive in its demand for preparedness until the day of universal peace shall come.

CONCERNING WATKINS.

Mr. Watkins, Progressive nominee for the Michigan governorship, is trying to explain why he voted for a tonnage tax in the last session of the Michigan legislature. His principal reason is that the mines were not "worked" hard enough, which shows how principle can be interfered with by prejudice.

No one ever heard of Watkins finding any fault with the assessments of the farming sections of the lower peninsula.

Not once!

And yet the lands of the farmers are taxed only lightly as compared with mines and other property in the upper peninsula.

Now Watkins is looking for the votes of the miners and he is trying to explain what he really meant in voting for the tonnage tax.

It was any measure or any plan to boost the valuations of the mines no matter how unfair in principle. That was the vice of it no matter what excuse Watkins or his friends are seeking to now put forward.

The way to show our opposition to the fellows who seek to seek as is to seek them. Seek Watkins.—Lehighing Iron Ore.

THE SINEWS OF WAR.

If the report that comes from New York is to be credited the cause of international peace has received a very substantial boost. It is, briefly, that the capitalists, the bankers of the United States, England, France and Germany, have agreed to loan no money hereafter for war purposes. If this is adhered to serious and continued international wars may perhaps be at an end.

Money has wisely been termed the sinews of war. War cannot be carried on without it. To an extent and in ways that would not ordinarily be suspected its presence or absence makes itself felt. First of all, soldiers must be paid as well as supported, for they have families dependent on them who cannot be left with absolutely nothing. It is a fact well established that an army cannot be maintained without adequate pay. History has repeatedly shown this. Even in the American war of the revolution, a war founded on principle as far as any could be and carried to success by the sacrifices of the colonists, one of the big obstacles to earlier success, and one of the things that prevented a more successful conduct of the struggle at the start, was the failure of the continental congress to provide adequate pay and the consequent difficulty of maintaining a standing army. Even then, when the colonists were fighting for the rights of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness," funds were a vital necessity with which to pay the soldiers. And this is only one of the expenses of war. The armies must be maintained, they must be fed and clothed, they must be supplied with arms and ammunition. The whole fighting organization must be kept at highest efficiency and to do this entails an enormous expenditure of money.

History has shown that war means debt. No nation is so rich in itself or so fortunately situated that it can support from its own wealth an extended military struggle. After a very short time it is compelled to go to its neighbors and borrow and its success is conditioned on its ability to negotiate the necessary loans. If money cannot be secured from foreign sources the war cannot be carried on. So if the bankers of the four leading countries of the earth, the heads of the monetary centers of the world, declare against war and refuse to loan money for carrying it on and if they steadfastly refuse the higher and higher rates of interest offered wars must cease. The Balkan-Turkish difficulty can last only a short time unless the nations involved can draw upon their credit. In a large sense the fate of the world is dependent on those who control the money.

Nearly every trust in the country has its home in the state of New Jersey, where the Democratic candidate for president is governor, when he works at it, but so far we have not heard that one of them ever received a lady-like slap on the wrist for existing, much less that one has been destroyed, as the candidate tells us ought to be done with them. They do love their trusts and "sheeters" in Jersey.

Wonder if the Mining Journal, which appears to have swallowed the Progressive bait, as well as hook, will be able to digest the Whimsey Watkins part of it. His tonnage tax attitude can hardly agree with the M. J.'s stomach.

Testimony so far before the Chapin investigating committee at Washington has proved that $618,000 was expended prior to the Republican national convention at Chicago to produce the "spontaneous demand" for Roosevelt.

The business of the country, from that of the humblest laborer, the farmer, and the tradesman, to that of the largest manufacturer and merchant will best be served by the re-election of Taft.

By this time next month a lot of patriots will be worrying about who's going to get the postoffice and many other soft berths.

An epitome of the paramount issue of the campaign—immunity.

The "white hope" in Jack Johnson's case is the strong arm of the law.

Well, did you register?

Calumet M. E.—J. P. Cunningham, of Kearsarge, will preach in the morning, and the pastor, Rev. W. H. Colby will preach at the pastor M. E. in the morning, and in the evening Mr. Kent of Tamarack, will have charge of the services.

First Baptist church—Rev. G. D. Harner will have charge of both services. His morning theme will be, "The story of a Shiloh exile," and in the evening "The Creation."

"THIS IS MY 56TH BIRTHDAY."

Kentuck Cox, the noted painter whose death was erroneously reported some months ago, was born in Warren, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1856. He attended art schools in Cincinnati and Philadelphia, and then went to Paris, where he studied under Gerome and Carolus-Duran. He returned to the United States in 1882 and soon acquired a high reputation in his art. Mr. Cox is noted particularly for his figure pieces and portraits. Some of the best examples of his art are to be seen in the Library of Congress in Washington and in the State Capitals of Iowa and Minnesota.
